

ABSTRACT:

A data processing apparatus is capable of executing an operation that requires many more operands than can be provided in a single instruction. An original instruction starts execution of the operation and other, operand supplying instructions that follow each other in time are used to supply the operands for that operation. When such an operand
5 supplying instruction is not supplied in time, execution of the original instruction is suspended.

Fig. 1

PHNL000650